Oklahoma State University
American Indians Into Psychology (AIIP)

The Clinical Psychology program at Oklahoma State University (APA accredited) is proud to offer a program that will provide opportunities for American Indian students to enter into mental health professions in Psychology.

The primary goals of our program are to:
- Provide outreach and recruitment for mental health careers to American Indian communities nationwide.
- Develop liaisons with tribal communities, university affiliated programs, and other entities to promote the education of American Indian students.
- Provide summer mentoring programs for American Indian students to gain exposure to the diverse aspects of the field of Psychology through research, clinical, and experiential activities.
- Provide scholarships and stipends to undergraduate and graduate students to pursue careers in clinical psychology.
- Provide psychological services to under-served American Indian communities by establishing training opportunities to psychology graduate students in American Indian communities.
